

A CUP OF YAK BUTTER TEA IN A TIBETAN NOMAD TENT

<https://www.2thepointnews.com/a-cup-of-yak-butter-tea-in-a-tibetan-nomad-tent-2/>

At 14,000 feet, Tibetan nomads called Drogha set their summer encampment for their yak herds to graze on green pastures. You find them with difficulty in the remote Himalayan highlands of the Kingdom of Lo. They are happy to welcome you into their home, a single large tent of black yak wool, and serve you a cup of delicious yak butter tea.

It is a rare privilege to be with these people and experience their ancient way of life. It is something we strive to do on our Himalaya Helicopter Expeditions. I took this picture in May. Here is their home from the outside. (Glimpses of Our Breathtaking World #203 photo ©Jack Wheeler)

