Pfizer's

Disaster

What it Means

This HFR focuses on one issue. A lot happened this week and last, much of it highly consequential. There is a comet in tonight's sky, or in the words of Tecumseh, the famous Shawnee leader; there is a panther in the sky.

A Chinese spy balloon is also in the sky, with some reports claiming it is 55 miles above the Minuteman ICBM fields, while later reports claiming it hovered at 120,000 feet, and later 60,000 ft. The line separating the atmosphere from space is 60 miles up. It is thought that the Government's Utah Data Center is the balloon's objective.

Still, it is the panther in the sky that warns of a deep change coming.

The Shawnee saw Halley's Comet as the end of the Woodland Indian Culture. The Veritas videos of Pfizer employee Jordan Trishton Walker are unbelievable and genuinely are consistent with the heavens presenting the panther in the sky. The winds of change are blowing hard.

For more details, look at yesterday's Skye's Links. Here

In case you missed the video, the link below is to the Veritas website as the armies of lawyers are pulling it down everywhere else:

Overview

Epistemology is the study of knowledge and how truth is separated from falsehood. AI is greatly influencing this, as are weaponized global narratives. The conflict between the emotives vs. the rationals, the Scholastics vs. Romantics, and Apollo 11 vs. Woodstock is accelerating.

Three principle value systems, or ethical systems, have been in the United States since day one. Even Tecumseh, the great warrior chief, recognized these systems as eternal.

The first and longest-running system is Deontological. Deontology means that how the ends are achieved matters. When a person is wronged, they seek redress in the courts, not with a handgun on the streets. Police are expected to follow due process instead of beating people into submission. Pharmaceutical companies are expected to follow established scientific methods when developing vaccines while validating their safety and effectiveness through repeatable scientific studies.

The second value system is based on virtues. Educate people to conduct themselves according to critical virtues and emphasize using them in everyday decision-making. Until recently, the purpose of the Boy Scouts was to immerse youth in a culture emphasizing virtues and their application to problems in the field. Although Lord Baden-Powell founded Scouting in England, Daniel Beard and Thomas Seton gave the organization a uniquely American flavor. Even so, Baden-Powell reached back into antiquity to model Scouting on Aristotelian Philosophy.

The third system is ancient and places the ends ahead of the means. It is not a question of following due process or culturally accepted standards of virtue. This third system puts the ends first and fabricates whatever means are necessary to achieve those ends. These ethics are called Consequentialist or teleological and support the ability of governments to manufacture emergencies out of whole cloth or companies to release utterly and completely untested vaccines into the global population.

Consequentialist ethics might be called mission-focused. There are two prominent flavors.

The first is called Utilitarianism and, in its best form, seeks to achieve the greatest good for the most significant number using a form of ethical algebra. The problems with this approach are evident with the mRNA vaccines when the greatest good turned into the greatest harm. Pfizer's Hubris will likely destroy the company, is severely damaging millions, and fuels a deep distrust of the government.

Pfizer capitalized on fear and acted without due process. This is Utilitarianism.

Pfizer's approach made its insiders wealthy, but the untested vaccines damage people's vascular and hormonal systems. Not only are people dying, but the conception rate within the vaccinated population has fallen at least thirty percent—maybe more. Pfizer might have prevented more births -ended more human life than the abortion industry has since Roe was legalized, putting the firm into the ranks of Stalin and Mao.

Hedonism is the second form of Consequentialism, and those that have gone all-in with teleological ethics endorse Hedonism in all its forms. They understand, from deep within the government think tanks and university philosophy departments, that Hedonism is a fellow traveler with Utilitarianism. While one says that whatever achieves a goal is good, the other insists that whatever feels good is right and just. Hence the rainbow coalition.

Utilitarianism needs Hedonism to finish off Virtue Ethics and Deontological, due process ethics.

The United States has lost every war, surrendered our technological edge, deindustrialized, and squandered 98% of the value of our currency since the government adopted Utilitarian philosophies. The Pfizer case is the latest example of attempting to reach a goal by any means possible, corrupting that goal irredeemably.

The Foundational Question

The question is not Lenin's who does what to whom. That is strictly a Utilitarian question. The real question is, what do we believe? Do character and due process matter? Or are the only things that matter tied up with the goals of the aristocracy in power?

Whenever this question has surfaced throughout history, it is followed by violence and destruction. A recent example occurred during the 1930s when the German Volk looked at Berlin and said enough. It did not end well, and American troops still occupy Germany.

Soviet subjects looked at the USSR and said enough, but as the war in Ukraine and the other wars between Russia and former satellites show, Utilitarianism remained. The people were unable to become virtuous and law-abiding.

The great religious traditions of the United States kept Consequentialism at bay for over two centuries. We have the Second Amendment to defend the individual against the State, wisely placed into the Bill of Rights to prevent the Utilitarian Ethos from overwhelming freedom.

The Pfizer case screams that our most prominent institutions have crossed the Rubicon. The situation also screams that Pfizer assumed that they and their cronies could control the narrative forever. Incoming now will be the most incredible propaganda push in history, using any means to recover narrative control.

Our government continues demonstrating that it will kill citizens to maintain the narrative. There is no opinion or Ethos that they will not criminalize in the goal of narrative control. Ask any federal employee, and the vast majority will repeat robotically that the needs of the many outweigh those of the few.

No matter what the Noble Goal is, the tech industry, the Democrats, the RINOS, Education, and health industries, and the military will now corrupt the goal with Consequentialism. Our State Department demands adherence through its sham Rules-Based Order. In reality, it's just Calvin Ball. The rules are made up whenever a new narrative is launched.

Science And Engineering

We are watching Pfizer blow up. A new

Veritas video discussing the menstrual cycle disruptions associated with mRNA and Pfizer's decision to bury the findings was released last night. It is damning.

Pfizer's behavior is appalling, but my personal experience now finds as many as half of newly graduated scientists and engineers entering research and manufacturing are utilitarians. Data falsification is now standard; computer algorithms are written to mislead the boss or the boss's boss. Decades of hard work to improve systems and quality are thrown out the window. It is simply easier to adjust electronic records than to solve problems in the physical domain.

Understand this and what the consequences will be. About half of the newly graduated scientists and engineers have a teleological mindset. They produce false results and medical studies that cannot be replicated. They do not fear consequences—only discovery.

The message from Veritas is that our technology is deeply corrupt. The United States is a technological society of systems on top of systems. We have never faced the extent of social and systemic brittleness we face today. We might go to war over Taiwan. But, as the drawdown in ammunition from the war in Ukraine demonstrates, our ability to replace stocks is imaginary.

The infamous March Through the Institutions is the substitution of Deontological and Virtuous Ethics with Consequentialism. Utilitarianism won the election of Barak Obama.

Hedonism is evident in the Biden White House. Hunter Biden is a feature, not a defect. Burying due process forever is a Deep State objective, as is snuffing out the Virtue Ethics that stand in the way of reprogramming humans as quickly as a new application is loaded on a mobile phone.

The New World Order needs Hunter Biden to transfer ultimate power to the arbiters of right and wrong.

Nature and the material world remain governed by fixed laws regardless of whether or not the arbiters agree. Those that live in the digital world can drift as far from reality as those in the political world. In the case of the new biological sciences where the computer meets human DNA, the drift can be catastrophic. It already is.

The New World Ethics

Ethics and consistent legal standards that enabled the producers and doers to shine. So far, in the 21st Century, we have abandoned this. Few foresaw that centralizing power into a secret and unaccountable security state would tilt the table from historical American values to grotesque Consequentialism. But it has. Read the list of senior intelligence officials that declared Hunter's laptop to be Russian disinformation and twice impeached Trump over horse hockey. They did it because they thought they would not be caught and there would be no repercussions if caught.

Just like Pfizer.

As they laugh at the plebes, the IC claims that they are mission-focused, the world is dangerous, and if the plebes only knew how difficult things are, we, too, would accept being charlatans. Further, they claim to be entitled to the personal validation, power, and wealth they earn from narrative control.

So dangerous, dontchaknow, are masculine men of resolute character that refuse to accept a false narrative that we must purge them from the military. If war is to be just button-pushing and propaganda, honor gets in the way.

Some did see this coming with the self-esteem movement. Kids were told they were something other than they were and praised for claiming undeserved success. Well, they grew up without ever learning who they were. Eventually, they will become enraged at what was unleashed on them.

We fought the who-whom question throughout the Cold War.

This was the Cold War. Many lessons can be used today. Young professionals, perhaps half, fear authenticity. They passed through the university system without serious examination as long as they parroted the daily narrative. They fear Randian heroes and the self-directing that reject being employees of large syndicates. They fear that those that can perform the work might expose those that cannot.

The other half maintains Deontological Ethics, performs their duties, and follows laws and due process. They do the math and conduct themselves diligently. They can't shoulder the load forever.

Elon Musk exposed the extent of the problem by firing over 60% of Twitter staff within a few days of buying the company. It runs better without the consequentialists. That which Elon exposed is endemic within American business.

If we enter a recession and widespread layoffs, those that dump the inauthentic grifters and sophists will roar back to health. Pfizer's public board of directors allowed the grift to continue. Putting Twitter in private hands ended it. Accountability is the big lesson.

Our institutions have walked mainly away from Virtue Ethics. The hiring question is no longer what type of person we should trust to make decisions. It has been replaced with what kind of employee will follow orders and report good results when they do not emerge?

In other words, companies are being run to maximize value regardless of the secondary and tertiary effects.

The problem with this is enormous. Leaders have difficulty distinguishing near-term equilibrium from long-term disequilibrium.

Pfizer pursued tremendous short-term profits. They might have destroyed their company in the process. The wrath of Generation Z will be impossible to contain.

Types of Consequentialism

At least five types of Consequentialism can be found with differing complexity. Plain Consequentialism deals with the wrongness or rightness of a decision or action. The desired outcome has the best consequences for the object. If total happiness is the objective, then total happiness is the multiple of happiness and people or time.

Happiness includes the action itself (the cost) and the expected results. Plain Consequentialism is, therefore, probabilistic.

- Scalar Consequentialism deals with good and bad as opposed to right and wrong. Of two or more choices and actions, one is better even though all might be good or bad because of a summing of total goodness.
- Expectable Consequentialism includes reasonable expectations of results or intent. The outcome is not as important. It allows the well-intentioned Good Samaritan to take action without holding them accountable for results. It does not pursue the best result and assumes that the perfect is often the enemy of the good enough.
- Reasonable Consequentialism introduces stochastic intent to achieve the best outcome based on incomplete information. A mission might fail, or a vaccine might cause significant harm, but it is acceptable based on the reasoning when action was initiated.
- Dual Consequentialism attaches moral values to an objective decision. The correct action has the best consequences and the best-expected consequences.
- Rule Consequentialism considers an action right if it is within the rules. It does not follow norms but just rules, and the laws in play may change according to their impact on the desired goal. Examples are social distancing, vaxx passports, and terminations. You know, Calvin Ball.

The International Rules-Based Order that the Department of State talks about is an example of Rule Consequentialism and is intended to replace Divine Command Theory. Putin must go as well as Christianity and Islam because these are deterministic and derived from Divine Command Theory, a form of Deontology. If Putin had maintained the former USSR's Consequentialist Ethics, Europeans would have accepted him in the club.

TTP members have expressed frustration with the war in Ukraine. As conservatives, we know deep in our hearts that Consequentialism is an immoral ethic. We also see that Putin is acting Deontologically. The United States is traditionally Deontological.

However, Putin's form of Deontology is One Nation, Under Vlad. Conservative America is One Nation, Under God.

I strongly submit that no man may be allowed to be a god. The entirety of Christianity, with God becoming man stands in contrast to a man becoming a god. Yes, Putin indeed jeopardizes the NWO and its Consequentialism. But restoring authenticity and integrity does not justify the means. How we regain civilization matters, and Putin just is not it.

The NWO and Utilitarianism

The new Elites were created during the War on Terror, not the Cold War. The enemy, they believe, is the Hobbesian State of Nature, or the war of all against all. Small, decentralized, non-state, or covert actors defeated the United States in Iraq and Afghanistan. Their mission became collective security by eliminating freedom because the terrorist enemy was unwilling and unable to enter agreements.

These new Elites attempted to make agreements with other parties, such as Iran, that might influence the terrorist groups. In their Utilitarian minds, it is better to give Iran millions or billions in cash, regardless of the secondary effects, if the payments bought the cooperation of the Iranian secret police.

The NWO approach is not much different from the one we had with the Shah back in the day. That did not work out well.

It's all the Elites have; their profession is one of hairsplitting and pomposity. They behave as if they are triaging patients to allow the most efficient use of resources. Their methods are aligned with John Stuart Mill as they spin endless schemes to achieve their goals.

However, their Utilitarianism, the so-called Rule bases International Order is not principle-based. It encourages defections and double-dealing, as well as outright fraud.

Again, TTPers are repulsed by such a system. TTPers are virtuous in personal conduct and very concerned with standards and rationality. I joined TTP to associate with TTPers.

The Ethos that the enemy of my enemy is my friend is the core of the NWO. The NWO types are in a panic to give every possible tool to Ukraine to stop Putin because he is Deontological. Remember, the same fury they throw at Putin will eventually be directed at us.

Putin must be defeated because he is assuming the role of a god. The Elitist notion is that Putin must be defeated because he exposes corruption and settles in on tremendously large, undeveloped natural gas fields. The conservative position is that no man may play God over other men's souls.

Putin's ends do not justify his means.

Hedonism

Klaus Schwab told us that we would own nothing and be happy.

His words are an expression of Hedonism. It is the morality of maximizing pleasure without the need for the self. Just sensations and satisfaction of wants matter in this system.

As mentioned above, Hedonism is necessary for Utilitarianism to work as the new global philosophy. The LGBTQP movement is raw Hedonism as the very self is replaced with physical sensations.

The cultural takeover is evident in the Veritas videos of Pfizer Guy. The video is of a professionally educated and over-promoted man responding to a date request for gay sex. In exchange for satisfying his urges, he caused Pfizer to lose $64 Billion in market capital and possibly their entire enterprise.

The NWO will not survive. They can't. There is a system without loyalty, authentic competency, or consistent processes.

The Pfizer videos and what they mean are the good news of the week and perhaps of the Century to date. The wealthiest, cash-rich, and politically powerful organizations in the world are organized around an ancient philosophy that optimizes the short term but destroys its practitioners.

A great deal of rot must be unwound and will be. Society will likely become very violent because the losers will do anything to keep their power. The trend reverses as if an economic boom/bust cycle is entering the bust phase. Only this time, it is philosophical and cultural.

A trend to watch is the rapid growth of Neo Nazism, and not just in Ukraine. At the same time, the Consequentialists that grew up during the self-esteem movement attempt to build a new global aristocracy; the youth are getting angry. Not hippy dippy draft-card burning angry but starving rural Germans looking at decadent Berlin in 1930 angry.

We, as TTPers, now need to stand up and lead. Stay engaged; there is a rage burning in the land. We have a Civilization to save.
