No, this isn't the Serengeti. The Etosha Pan is a huge 2,000 square mile salt pan in northern Namibia that has an amazing abundance of African wildlife that flourishes in a desert – lots of elephants as you see, giant eland, huge oryx, kudu with the males sporting their glorious spiral horns, wildebeest, zebra, all kinds of antelope, plus lions and leopards galore hunting them.

They all thrive on the available river and springs water amidst the surrounding mopane balsam woodlands. It's one of Africa's least known yet most astounding wildlife spectacles. Come during the dry winter months of July-September when the animals gather around the waterholes. You'll never forget it. (Glimpses of Our Breathtaking World #291, photo ©Jack Wheeler)
